THE ANNIHILATOR ASCENDANT — A CITY DEVoured WHOLE

Sir Caprice Seizes One Hundred and Sixty Turfs, Smashes Thirty-Two Headquarters, and Apparently Has No Intention of Stopping Whatsoever

BY OUR MAN IN THE TRENCHES, IGNATIUS P. FLAMBEAU

This correspondent confessed last week, with no small degree of theatrical exhaustion, that Sir Caprice had laid waste to ten enemy headquarters and claimed eighty-three turfs in a single seven-day span. He advised readers to brace themselves. Dear reader, you did not brace nearly enough.

In the week ending this very edition, Sir Caprice — The Annihilator, the Unstoppable, the Scourge Made Flesh — has surpassed his own already-ludicrous benchmark by a margin that would make Julius Caesar blush and Napoleon weep into his bicorne. One hundred and sixty turfs seized. Thirty-two enemy headquarters stormed, looted, and left as smouldering monuments to the folly of resistance. Ninety-one raids conducted upon the trembling storehouses of his enemies. The man has not slept. He cannot possibly have slept. His garrison now stands at a mountainous 6,965 gangsters — sixty more enrolled this week alone — a private army that dwarfs anything Vendetta City has witnessed in living memory.

Among those who fell beneath The Annihilator's boot this week: Ehsan, Biggs, laeawolf, RadithJuno (struck twice, the poor wretch), Hiuu (also struck twice — one wonders if the man has a death wish or merely a very poor memory), and the numerical enigma known only as 4542323412, whose headquarters presumably held some sentimental value it no longer possesses. Thirty-two souls in total kissed their command posts goodbye, scrambling to reconstitute their operations from whatever forgotten back-alley turf they still held in reserve.

Two fortresses dared to hold firm against the onslaught — their garrisons numbering eleven or more stalwart defenders, forcing even The Annihilator's henchmen to fall back from the threshold. These "HQ Destroyed" engagements stand as the week's sole consolation prizes for a beleaguered citizenry. The walls held. The flags did not change. It was, by any measure, a moral victory of the most pyrrhic variety.

THE FALLEN: SOPRANO, DUCHESS, AND THE RUINS OF FORMER GREATNESS

Tony Soprano Loses Twenty-Seven Turfs and Is Raided Twenty-Three Times; Duchess Reduced to Zero Garrison

BY OUR CITY DESK CORRESPONDENT

While the city's attention fixes upon The Annihilator's inexorable march, spare a moment's sympathy — or at minimum, a raised eyebrow — for those ground beneath the wheels of this terrible machine. Tony Soprano, the once-swaggering boss of the East Quarter, has suffered the indignity of losing twenty-seven turfs this week whilst being raided a staggering twenty-three times. His garrison, still a respectable 2,088 strong, suggests the man retains the capacity for a comeback — but his coffers have been picked cleaner than a Thanksgiving carcass on a Depression headline.

Duchess fares considerably worse. Having shed twenty-three turfs and absorbed eighteen raids upon her remaining holdings, she arrives at week's end with a garrison of precisely zero. Not a henchman. Not a bouncer. Not so much as an elderly doorman with a hat pin. Whether her forces were destroyed in battle, recalled in panicked retreat, or have simply deserted en masse to seek more promising employment is a matter this newspaper's investigators are pursuing with characteristic tenacity.
