THE ANNIHILATOR UNCHAINED — AGAIN

Sir Caprice Storms Ten More Headquarters; Vendetta City Runs Short of Bosses to Obliterate

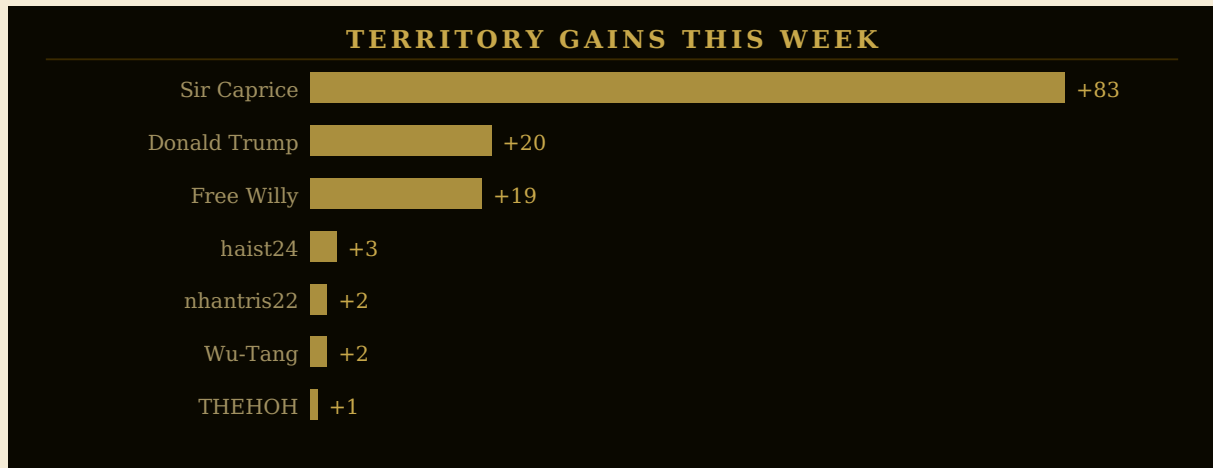

BY OUR MAN IN THE TRENCHES, IGNATIUS P. FLAMBEAU

Last week, dear reader, this correspondent exhausted the better part of his thesaurus endeavouring to describe the cataclysmic territorial rampage of one Sir Caprice. This week, your humble scribe is compelled to report — with a trembling hand and a generous tumbler of rye — that The Annihilator has done it again, and done it worse. Or better, depending upon which side of the tommy gun one finds oneself.

In the seven days spanning this edition's reckoning, Sir Caprice has seized a staggering eighty-three turfs, battered down ten enemy headquarters, and simultaneously plundered the city's coffers through no fewer than forty-five lightning raids upon hapless rivals. His garrison, a fearsome private army already the envy of every two-bit racketeer from the waterfront to the gasworks district, has swelled by another two hundred and eleven souls — bringing his total fighting force to a positively terrifying six thousand, nine hundred and twelve gangsters. This is not an empire; it is a geological phenomenon. It is a landslide with a hat.

Among the unfortunates who found their headquarters shattered beneath Sir Caprice's iron boot this week: the hapless Fahwa, the ill-starred Hossein Nftdan, the bewildered têtre, the twice-ruined Devkalio2 — who had the singular misfortune of losing his newly re-established headquarters twice in the same afternoon — and the formerly respectable Merlin, whose garrison has now been reduced to a round and melancholy zero. When a man's garrison reads naught, gentlemen, he is not repositioning. He is broken.

DONALD TRUMP AND FREE WILLY: THE AMBITIOUS LIEUTENANTS

Two Rising Powers Carve Their Own Bloody Paths Through the City's Weaker Precincts

BY OUR MAN IN THE TRENCHES, IGNATIUS P. FLAMBEAU

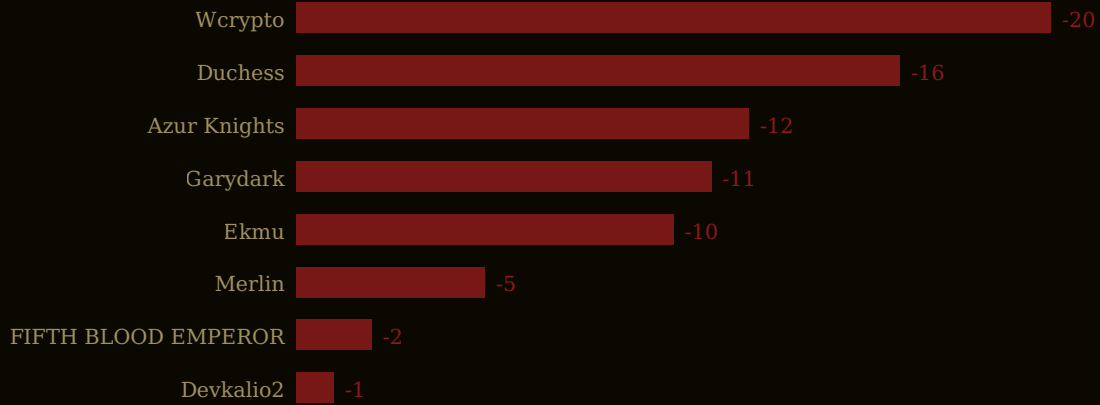

While Sir Caprice commands the front page by divine right of sheer destructive volume, it would be a disservice to overlook the vigorous ambitions of Donald Trump and Free Willy, both of whom have enjoyed exceedingly productive weeks by any normal measure of criminal achievement.

Trump — whose garrison now stands at a robust six thousand, four hundred and seventy-eight, swollen by one hundred and twenty-one fresh recruits — added twenty turfs to his portfolio and personally stormed two enemy headquarters. His most celebrated conquest was the demolition of Wcrypto's command post, a turf that the beleaguered Wcrypto had apparently failed to adequately garrison despite losing it — along with twenty other properties and nineteen raids upon his coffers — in a week so calamitous it defies polite description. Wcrypto, formerly among the city's more conspicuous operators, has been stripped to the bone.

Free Willy, meanwhile, proved himself a scrapper of genuine distinction, storming three headquarters — those of Garydark, the mysterious 675vc, and the unfortunate 321dasq — while adding nineteen turfs to his holdings. One notes with some amusement that Free Willy's garrison of sixty-eight men is, by the standards of this city's titans, positively microscopic. That a fellow commanding sixty-eight souls can storm three headquarters in a week suggests that Free Willy is either extraordinarily bold, extraordinarily lucky, or extraordinarily good at picking his moments. Possibly all three.
